THE REAL THING

"WOULD you believe it, Nancy? I mean, did you ever think it would really happen . . . I mean . . . well, you know what I mean. It's just so wonderful and all."

"For heaven's sake, Robyn, you have been talking on and on for ages, and I really don't know any more about what's so wonderful than I did before you ever knew him. I'm all ears, so please begin at the beginning and don't stop until you tell me every little detail. Don't forget the details . . . I just love to hear about the little things."

Robyn reached for another cookie, bit off a tiny portion, sighed slightly and just looked starry-eyed. Nancy was sprawled out on the floor and propped up on one elbow, just looking at Robyn and waiting. She was giving her time to get ready to tell of her latest love Elliot, and as Robyn said, her "last love", 'cause this is "forever". In her sixteen years, there have been many times when Robyn would say "this is forever". That "forever" had lasted as long as five months and for as little time as one week. Nancy always did a good job of predicting how long things would last. She was all prepared to listen to Robyn and then, as she always did when the tale was finished, would say, "I give this whole thing about . . ." and fill in the amount of time she thought Robyn's interest would be sustained.

"Last week," Robyn began, "Centerville was playing the big game against Woodlawn High. Woodlawn is about a three hour ride from here, and my cousin Anne, who goes to Woodlawn and is on the cheering squad, invited me to sleep at her house Saturday night after the game. She told me that the football team and the cheering squad were having a party to celebrate the end of the season. She also made sure to tell me that many of the boys on their team were just dreamy, and you know how I love dreamy boys."

"Really, Rob . . . boys, plural, I'm not so anxious to hear about. What I'm interested in, is the one who sends you!" Nancy said.

"You can't rush me, Nancy," Robyn replied. "I have to tell you the whole story. Things weren't all simple. Anyway, let me get back to the week end at Woodlawn. Mother said I could go and she even said she would let me buy a new dress for the party. You can imagine how excited I was about that!

"The ride to Woodlawn was lots of fun. We all sang songs on the bus, and before we knew it, we were there. The bus went right to the football stadium and Woodlawn had an entire welcoming committee waiting for us. Anne was in the group and she took me down to the field during the game, so that I could stay with her and the rest of the cheering squad. It was very exciting to watch the game from the field and see the expressions on the faces of the boys when they would yell for a pass or when they would all find themselves in a pileup. The boys looked kind of cute, especially one, whom I first noticed when he was buried underneath a group of about seven boys. It was toward the end of the game and he was carrying the ball and tripped right in front of me, and then the whole gang seemed to pile on top of this poor guy. All that was sticking out was his head, and it was practically right at my feet. I looked down and his blue, smiling eyes were looking up at me. Imagine him being able to smile with a few hundred pounds on top of him! As the last boy rolled over and got up, my blue-eyed friend jumped to his feet and was gone.

"When the squad came back after their cheer, I rushed over to Anne and said, 'Anne! That one who carried the ball . . . the one with the blue eyes . . . the one at the bottom of the pile . . . number nine, I think . . . who is he? Will he be at the party tonight?'

"For a minute, Anne said nothing. Then she answered, 'Yes, he is kind of cute, isn't he?

He'll be at the party with his girl . . . Anne!'

"I was terribly embarrassed, and must have become as red as the sweater I was wearing. I said nothing after that and Anne was very sweet. She put her arm through mine, saying, 'Glad you have good taste! Come on . . . let's have a hot dog!'

"That night, the boys looked so different in suits and clean faces. They all sparkled with cleanliness. Those blue eyes I told you about sparkled too, and although I planned not to flirt with my cousin's boy friend, he came over to introduce himself to me. Anne was one of the girls who was acting as hostess, and she was really too busy to spend a lot of time with Elliot. He was very aggressive . . . sort of the 'master of any situation' type of boy. He walked toward me with a smile on his face and said, 'You did a very unusual thing today, young lady! I've been playing football for Woodlawn for four years now, and until today, I had never been distracted by anything when I was out on the field. A space ship could sail above me and I probably wouldn't notice, but when I looked up at you and you smiled down at me, I could hardly remember a play during the rest of the game. Kind of lucky, I guess, that it happened in the last quarter. By the way, my name's Elliot Brent!

"'I'm Robyn Lands, Anne's cousin' I said.

"'I know,' Elliot answered. 'Before the party, Anne and I had a long talk. She told me that she doesn't want to go steady any more, and she told me about you. This afternoon, I feared that I might never meet you again. You have no idea how happy I am that things worked out this way.'

"That was the beginning, Nancy! It was a wonderful night. We danced, sang, had sandwiches and punch, and saying good night was the most wonderful part of all. When he kissed me, I knew he was the one for me. We spent most of Sunday together, and when we said good-bye, he told me that he has a friend in our neighborhood with whom he can stay for a week end. He's coming in next week. I'm dying for you to meet him!"

Just then, Robyn's mother called, telling her that she had a long distance phone call. Robyn jumped up and said, "Oh, that must be Elliot. He sure didn't waste any time."

She was gone for quite a while, and then came back to Nancy. Robyn looked disturbed and yet excited too. "Nancy," she said. "You've got to help me out. Do you remember that terrific fellow whom I met at the shore this summer and was so crazy about? Well, he just called and said that he's coming here for the week end and wants me to be his date. In all my excitement, I forgot completely about Elliot, Nancy, let's put our heads together and figure something out."

Nancy sighed and said, "Robyn, you sure do the silliest things, but at least there's never a dull moment when you're around."

Nancy didn't even have a chance to predict how long this "forever" would last. It was over before it even began!
